SPEIRS MAJOR

Bethlehem Steel used to be one of the largest shipbuilding and steel producers in the world and remains an important symbol of America's industrial might. As part of the development, several structures, including the blast furnaces that defined the city's skyline, have been carefully preserved and re-lit.

The community wanted to make sure that the history of the site was not forgotten. Our approach was to preserve the memory using light to retell the story of local steel production.
